Consider how well they work with these factors: Your audience: If you present a PowerPoint to a business crowd, secure colors such as blue and black connote stability and credibility. Conventional layout works well in this situation. Likewise, a artsier crowd can appreciate more color and less common layouts. Your content: The template must provide enough flexibility to accommodate your copy and graphics. For example, if much of your content is bulleted, look for a template that displays lists in a format that you find appropriate and pleasing to your audience. Your branding: If your project is business-related, branding is important. Choose a PowerPoint template that is harmonized with your logo, graphics, and style. Your image: Matching designs to your identity seems like an obvious suggestion, but it's easy to get wrong. For example, if you're creating a presentation on a highly technical topic, avoid templates with soft colors and graphics, no matter how much they appeal to you personally. Instead go for something sleek and modern. Your audience's perception of your image will affect how well its members receive your message.
